The University of Chicago Booth School of Business (Chicago, Illinois) invites applications for a Post-doctoral Principal Researcher (PR) position beginning July 1, 2022.

The Post-Doctoral Principal Researcher position is designed to foster research collaboration across behavioral marketing and related fields including cognitive, mathematical or social psychology, or behavioral economics, with a focus on consumer decision making. The Post-Doctoral Principal Researcher will collaborate on projects of mutual interest with behavioral marketing faculty at the Booth School, particularly Professors Dan Bartels, Abigail Sussman, and Oleg Urminsky. This position does not involve a set research agenda, and candidates who bring a unique skillset or complementary research agenda are encouraged. This position will prepare the Post-Doctoral Principal Researcher to subsequently apply for research-oriented faculty positions in marketing or related decision-making fields. This position is for one year, with the possibility of renewal for a second year. Applications will be evaluated beginning on February 1 and ending on March 1.

Knowledge, Skills, and Experience
1. Master’s degree in a relevant area is required; PhD preferred.
2. Familiarity with methods of experimentation preferred.
3. Data-analysis skills and knowledge of statistical methods is required.
4. Excellent communication skills required.
5. Ability to interact with faculty, students, and staff successfully required.
6. Good organizational skills and attention to detail required.
7. A CV, cover letter, and writing sample are required to apply for this position.
